

45 years later: Are we still just another brick in the wall?

1. How does the author use Pink Floyd's album "The Wall" to critique the education system?
2. What is the significance of the lyrics "We don't need no education, we don't need no thought control" in relation to the current educational system?
3. Why does the author believe that grades should not be the ultimate determinant of students' futures?
4. In what ways does Roger Waters paint a bleak image of the education system in his lyrics?
5. How does the author suggest that education should encourage free thinking and critical thought?
6. What parallels are drawn between the experiences of students today and those described by Waters in his lyrics?
7. Why does the author argue that students build psychological walls to protect themselves in the current educational environment?