"In California, a high school teacher complains that students watch NetFlix on their phones during class. Educators say students routinely send messages, listen to music and shop online, among countless other examples of how smartphones distract from teaching and learning.

The _____ (1) that phones have on adolescents in America today is well-documented, but teachers say parents are often not aware to what extent students use them inside the classroom.

James Granger, requires students in his science classes at high school to place their phones in "a cellphone cubby" with numbered slots. "The only solution that works is to physically remove the cellphone from the student."

Most schools already have rules regulating student phone use, but they are enforced sporadically. A growing number of leaders at the state levels have begun _____ (2) school cellphone bans.

In Utah, Gov. Spencer Cox, last month urged all school districts to remove cellphones from classrooms. He _____ (3) studies that show learning improves, distractions are decreased, and students are more likely to talk to each other if phones are taken away. "We just need a space for six or seven hours a day where kids are not _____ (4) to these devices," Cox told reporters.

Last year, Florida became the first state to _____ (5) on phones in school. A law that took effect in July requires all Florida public schools to ban student cellphone use during class time. Some districts went further and banned phones the entire school day."

Read the following text carefully

"Many states have also recently introduced what is becoming known as "phone-free schools" legislation. Some U.S. senators introduced legislation in December that would require a federal study on the effects of cellphone use in schools on students' mental health and academic performance.

Nationally, 77% of U.S. schools say they prohibit (1) cellphones at school for non-academic use, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. But that number is misleading.(2) It does not mean students are following those bans or all those schools are enforcing them. "Cellphone use is out of control. By that, I mean that I cannot control it, even in my own classroom," said Patrick Truman, who teaches at a Maryland high school that forbids student use of cellphones during class. It is up to each teacher to enforce the policy, so Truman bought a 36-slot caddy for storing student phones. Still, every day, students hide phones in their laps or under books as they play video games and check social media. A study last year from Common Sense Media found that 97% of kids use their phones during school hours,

The Phone-Free Schools Movement, an advocacy (3) group formed last year by concerned mothers, says policies that allow students to keep phones in their backpacks, as many schools do, are ineffective. "If the bookbag is on the floor next to them, it's buzzing (4) and distracting,(5) and they have the temptation to want to check it," said Kim Whitman, a co-founder of the group, which advises schools to require phones be turned off and locked away all day."
